Available at the Penn Bookstore.

Introduction

This course introduces students to the development of the rules and principles that govern individual and group conduct in the United States since 1877. Subjects to be covered include regulation and deregulation of business enterprises, the convergence of private and public law in contract, property, and personal injury law, the development of legal education and the legal profession, the evolution of legal philosophy and concepts of judging, Native American Indian relations, gender and the law, civil rights and civil liberties.

Requirements

Class will combine lecture and discussion. Preparation, attendance, and participation are essential. Each student will review in writing three books from an assigned reading list. The reviews must include a critical description and discussion of the contents and a summary and analysis of at least three reviews of the book in academic journals such as The Journal of American History, Reviews in American History, Law and History Review, The Journal of Social History, The Journal of Southern History, H-Net Reviews, or a university law review. Reviews from newspapers, popular magazines, and websites that are not academic in nature are not acceptable. If you have any doubt about a review, please ask.

There will be an in-class midterm on March 14 and a take home final examination, which will be distributed in class on April 25 and be due by ___, May ___, 2019. Details for submitting the final will be explained when it is distributed.

Evaluation

The course grade will be based on the book reviews, the exams, and class participation.
