

URBS 178 / HIST 173 / AFRC 078—Fall 2013

Faculty-Student Collaborative Action Seminar in Urban University-Community Relations: Penn and West Philadelphia as a Case Study in Progress
URBS 178 / HIST 173 / AFRC 078

What can Penn do to significantly improve the quality of education in West Philadelphia and simultaneously improve the quality of education of its undergraduates?

Dr. Ira Harkavy (harkavy@pobox.upenn.edu)

Adam Cohen (adco@sas.upenn.edu)

Theresa Simmonds (tesimmonds@verizon.net)

(Provisional syllabus; to be developed by students and faculty as the seminar progresses)

Seminar Goals:

One of the short term goals of the seminar is to help stimulate a radical transformation of the Penn undergraduate experience – a transformation in which undergraduates would, in the first instance, significantly, appropriately, and actively participate in the construction and operation of the seminars and courses in which they are members, and secondarily, in the construction and operation of all aspects of the undergraduate experience. Another goal of the seminar is to help students develop their interactive, democratic, empathetic, and altruistic values.

The main long term goal of the seminar, however, is to significantly contribute to the revolutionary transformation of universities as the primary agents to pragmatically develop participatory democracy in order to help transform American society into a truly collaborative, participatory, and democratic society.

Though the term participatory democracy is frequently used, few students are well acquainted with the term and really understand what the concept and theory mean. To remedy that situation for the members of this seminar, we will spend significant time clarifying the concept of participatory democracy through our readings and seminar discussions.
